(In a bakery, before it closes in the late evening.)

Volunteer: Excuse me, sir. I am a volunteer for the local food bank.

Do you still have any unsold bread or cakes today?

Could you give them to me?

Shopkeeper: What for?

Volunteer: Do you hear of any nonprofit organizations, like food banks in America?

Shopkeeper: No, I don't think so.

Volunteer: Well, those organizations usually get free unsalable food from stores or companies, and then give the food to poor people and families.

Our organization, just like those in America, helps solve hunger problems in Taiwan.

We volunteers will collect food and then give it away to people in need.

Shopkeeper: That is a good idea. I love to join the program and I won't waste my unsold bread for the day.

At the same time, I can help other people.

Volunteer: That's the spirit of food banks!

Thank you very much, sir. It's very kind of you.

In the future, when the food in your bakery is ready, we volunteers will take it to the food bank.

(44-47)

My daughters and sons,
 My granddaughters and grandsons,
 Are all beside my bed.
 It is like those holidays,
 When they all gathered at my house,
 Enjoying big meals, or getting ready for a trip.

Except, this time,
 The trip is only mine.
 I wait and wait,
 Wait for the time to depart.
 And finally, He comes.
 The guide of my very last trip.
 He slowly takes my hands.
 There is no rush, and we both know.
 We pass the schools and the parks.
 I see children playing,
 Their happy faces are so beautiful like flowers.
 We walk by fields,
 Green ones, yellow ones,
 And dried ones with no color.

Where are we going? I ask.
 The road ahead is long,
 And I see no end.
 He smiles, and says softly,
 "On!"

(Ideas from Emily Dickinson's poem 詩)
